FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE
NEWFOUNDLAND AND BRITISH NORTH AMERICA SCHOOL
SOCIETY FOR EDUCATING THE POOR.

IN once more meeting the friends of the Society, the Committee desire to acknowledge, with devout gratitude, the gracious providence of God, in being able to report favourably of its proceedings during the past year. Soon after the last Anniversary, your Committee, in common with the nation, had to deplore the decease of his late Most Gracious Majesty, William the Fourth, who had honoured the Society with his patronage: they have, however, the high satisfaction to announce that, through the kind recommendation of his Excellency the Governor of Newfoundland, her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, has been pleased to become the Patroness of the Society.

After the testimony thus borne to the character of the Society by his Excellency, it is scarcely necessary to add, that the schools continue to be favoured with his countenance and support. Those of them which have been visited by him and other distinguished individuals, have been found so conducted as to merit their expressed approbation: nor is it too much to say, that every year the utility of the Society's labors in the colony, are becoming more highly appreciated. The contributions in Newfoundland, including the Government grant, have amounted during the past year to £641..9s., reduced to sterling money. At present there are 46 principal and branch schools, into which have been admitted 9303 scholars, and there were on the books at the last return 3023. In addition to the number in the daily schools, 5497 have been taught in Sunday Schools, and 1231 have received instruction in adult schools. Your Committee feel that it is a source of much thankfulness to God, that none of your Teachers have been incapacitated by sickness during the year, but have been enabled steadily to pursue their interesting duty, and, above all, that they have continued to manifest a spirit of brotherly love and devotedness to their work. From the communications which your Committee have received from them, they will now proceed to lay before you some extracts.

Of one station the Teacher writes :

“ Our numbers during the year have varied between 180 and 215 scholars. Reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, geography, and navigation are being taught in the boys’ school, and reading, writing, arithmetic, sewing, knitting, and marking in the girls’ school. Portions of Scripture are daily committed to memory, and the children regularly questioned on the great leading truths and historical events of the Old and New Testaments, a privilege which your Teachers desire to acknowledge with gratitude to that God, who has hitherto defended their little flocks from the modern but truly lamentable departures from his own express commands.”

From another :

“ The daily school has been attended much, as in former years, during the summer months. The number present was, at times, more than 100 ; but throughout the winter, owing to a large proportion of the people leaving the harbour to reside in their winter quarters, the number in attendance has rarely exceeded 40 ; the Sunday school, also, has been pretty well attended, the children of the first class repeating each Lord's day the appointed Collect and Epistle, and those of the second class, the Collect; but although your Teachers have, at times, much to discourage them, still it is with thankfulness to the Giver of all good they indulge the hope that their labours have not been in vain, but that they see some fruit in the improved conduct of the children, and an evidently increasing regard for their instructors; they feel encouraged also under the impression that many of those who have been educated in the schools have improved their little stock of knowledge by reading to and teaching their friends to read. One instance lately occurred which, out of many that might be added, confirms this:—On visiting a sick person at a poor man's house, your Teachers asked the mistress of the house if she could read a few tracts offered for that purpose: she burst into tears and said, "Ah! poor George was my Teacher, but he is gone; he taught me to read a chapter in the Bible." The child alluded to had been entirely educated in your schools, and died about two years since. He had been in the habit of reading the word of God every day to his parents. Surely, it is not too much to hope, that He who will not despise 'the day of small things' will smile upon this feeble effort to make known His blessed will."

Another writes :

"The Teachers are happy to have to report of the principal school, that at no former period was it more flourishing than at present. The daily school has increased, and is increasing. The number of children now attending is 119, viz. 70 boys and 49 girls; and the adult evening school, open during the winter months, was attended by 28 scholars. With respect to this school, the Teachers trust they may say, their scholars generally have made advances in the different branches of education, yet they are anxious to see greater, much greater things than these—they want to see fruits of grace abounding to the glory of God. Some few tokens for good do appear; and in some of our scholars your Teachers have had the delight of beholding a love for the Bible, a love for prayer, and hatred of a profane and lying tongue."

From another :

"Though we have met with many things to impede us in our work, yet, on the other hand, there are many things to encourage us, for which we desire to thank God. Our Sunday school during the summer afforded us much satisfaction, the children being fondly attached to the school, and making evident progress in scriptural knowledge, to the attainment of which our efforts are mainly directed. The average attendance was about 70, so that we are happy to add, their numbers are increasing. What remaineth, but that we go on sowing the good seed, and, like the husbandman, wait patiently for the precious fruit—'yea, that we have long patience for it, until we receive the early and latter rain.' Our daily school, too, has been encouraging; the growing improvement of the children being such as to satisfy our own minds that their attendance is not in vain. There are now on the books in our Sunday school, 41 boys and 45 girls—total 86, an increase of 14 since last December. In our daily school there are 29 boys and 45 girls—total 74, an increase of 9 in the same time. The boys leave our daily school for the fishery in the summer, and the woods in the winter, when they grow up to be about 12 or 13; but we have them on the Sabbath."

One of the Teachers reports of the branch school under his superintendence :

"The school continues to go on well, and is attended by 18 boys and 22 girls. The Teacher, who is indefatigable in his endeavours to improve the children under his care, being engaged to teach but three days in the week and on Sunday mornings, was employed to give instruction also at ——— on the other three days, and in the afternoon of each Lord's-day throughout the year. This little branch is attended also by 40 boys and girls. Total under this Teacher's care 80; of whom 21 can now read in the Bible, and 17 in the Testament. At ——— the Teacher is engaged to give instruction three days in the week during the winter, and catechize on the Sunday. This little school, which consists of 33 boys and girls, is a very interesting branch. In a late examination we were much gratified with the order, behaviour and improvement of the children. We heard 11 read in the Bible and 7 in the Testament; 20 repeated portions of Scripture from memory; and the church catechism was well rehearsed."

The Loan Libraries and distribution of Tracts, the Teachers write, continue to be of the most essential service; and your Committee would take this opportunity to acknowledge the valuable assistance which the Religious Tract Society, from time to time, has rendered, by furnishing the schools with Loan Libraries, and placing at the disposal of the Teachers large supplies of tracts and other religious books.

During the past year your Committee have received a grant of tracts to the amount of £40, and twelve of the schools have likewise been gratuitously supplied with a complete library.

On this subject one of the Teachers writes :

"The diffusion of education in this settlement has excited a taste for reading; and it is not a little gratifying to say that, by the circulation of the books which we received in the spring of last year, from the Religious Tract Society, we are enabled, as yet, to keep pace with the growing demand of the reading population, though the eagerness with which the books are sought after, and the avidity with which they are read, is very great. Nor can we duly estimate the benefit which this department of our work is calculated, under God's blessing, to bestow. Oftentimes, when visiting the people, have we witnessed the pleasing fact of a family sitting round the fire, listening to some interesting book from our Loan Library, read by one of our scholars.

"We have disposed of some Bibles, Testaments, Prayer Books, &c.; and four vessels that put into the harbor to take in fish for a foreign port, have been supplied with Tracts."

Another Teacher writes :

"There have been circulated 31 Bibles and Testaments; and the demand for the Prayer-book has been such, that though we have disposed of upwards of thirty, we have not been able to supply a tenth of the applications made for them.

"The Loan Library books and tracts have been productive of much benefit: they do not now refer to any particular instance of good done by this means; but they are convinced that the constant circulation of upwards of 100 volumes of the former, and the distribution of more than 1500 of the latter—that the careful reading, in most cases, which is evinced on examination, and the gratitude in many instances expressed, must, through the blessing of God, produce fruits of righteousness to His praise. In many instances the seal catchers are careful, on preparing for their dangerous voyage, to have their boxes furnished with a bible, prayer-book, and a supply of tracts. On one occasion, a party of eight men came, one only of whom entering the school-room begged for the rest. His request was, to have a few little books to take with him to sea, adding, 'There are more outside on the same errand.' He was asked if a good use was made of them? He replied, 'That he had some last year; very good books they were, and but for them there had been a good deal of time spent in a bad way. We gave him a parcel of about thirty different tracts, and said, the best way to use them would be, to appoint some good reader among the crew to read aloud to the rest; then any one who wished to have the tract for his own use might possess it. He replied, 'They did so.' After wishing us 'a pleasant spring,' he left us; and we had the pleasure of seeing him distribute among his fellows their shares. One took out his handkerchief, and carefully wrapped up his portion; another put his in the corner of his hat; another in his bosom; and all carefully putting away their shares, except one who walked on reading aloud, and at a little distance stood still, the rest standing around him. He could only pray, that the good seed sown under such circumstances might spring up and bear much fruit."

From another station :

"Many copies of the publications of the Religious Tract Society have been sold, and nearly 400 tracts have been gratuitously distributed amongst persons going to the seal fishery, and others remaining in the harbor; and good proof has been given, from time to time, that they have been attentively read. The Loan Library books have been eagerly sought after by old and by young: about 200 volumes are in constant circulation."

It was stated in the last Report that many of the Teachers, at the request and under the sanction of some of the Clergy, in the island, were engaged in reading the church service in places that would otherwise have been deprived of such means of grace on the Lord's day. In the same manner during the past year they have been conducting, on almost every sabbath, about 30 services, which your Committee cannot but regard as an additional argument in favour of the utility of the Society; considering the lamentable paucity of Clergymen for the necessities of the colony, and the suspension, by the Society for propagating the Gospel, of their catechists or lay readers.

The following extracts from the correspondence of the Teachers will shew, not only the importance and benefit of this part of their duties, but also point out the difficulties which press upon the Society in meeting the demands which the good already effected has naturally created.

“The Teacher has conducted the services of the church here, in the absence of a Clergyman, 38 sabbaths, twice, and 5 sabbaths once a day, during the past year. He has read the Rev. H. Blunt’s Lectures upon the History of St. Paul, Davy’s Cottage Sermons, Sermons by the Rev. C. Bradley, &c., &c. The services have been well attended. We have two services in the church, and a third in our school-room on the Lord’s day. In the latter we read parts of the church service, a portion of the Bible, and a tract or some other interesting book, so that our sabbaths are usually spent delightfully, and I doubt not profitably to many.

Another writes :

“The population of ——— consists of between 400 and 500, nearly one-half of whom are Roman Catholic. The Protestant part of the community were very anxious to have a school; and as the only means of securing a scriptural education for their children, their expressed wish was to be taken under the Society’s care, offering to do to their utmost for the support of the Teacher, and pointing out a fit person. He was eventually engaged to keep a day school during the winter months, and to conduct two services and keep a Sunday school through the year.”

Your Committee would take this opportunity to observe, that many such branch schools for a trifling sum might be opened. In the last Report one was mentioned as having been opened under like circumstances, and the Teacher, formerly a reader of the Propagation Society, engaged; and your Committee have much pleasure in acknowledging that one kind friend, through Lord Bexley, has undertaken to pay the salary of this Teacher. It would materially extend the operations of the Society if this example were, in some degree, to be followed.

The same Teacher continues :

"We proceeded up the shore of —— about 30 miles ; we visited the intervening coves and harbors, at no one of which was a school to be found. But such was the desire manifested by the people to have instruction, and that through the means of the Society, that we may truly say, "the harvest is ripe." And we are convinced, that if the Society's funds were in a state to allow us to aid them, the people in general would contribute with all their ability.

"At —— the people had applied for the help of the Society, and a grant of £15 was made towards the support of the Teacher, that a school which was opened by an individual a few months back might be continued among them, and be taken under the Society's care. On our arrival, we found the school in operation, in an unfinished room built this year by the people. And we were gratified on seeing a large school, consisting of 96 scholars, boys and girls. We were pleased also with the good feeling manifested by the people when we called them together to propose the completion of the school-room : they determined to finish it forthwith, expressed gratitude for the Society's aid, and promised to do all in their power for the comfort and support of their teacher."

"The branch station at ——," writes another, "still remains unoccupied for want of a pious and efficient Teacher. The inhabitants are particularly anxious that a person from your Society should be placed amongst them, and they appear willing to do all they can for his comfort and assistance."

From another.

"It was said in the last year's Report, that matters were in operation for re-opening —— ; but shortly after circumstances arose which rendered it prudent to leave it to be provided for by the Board of Education. This body having intimated by their resolutions that the books of the Irish Education Board would be used in their schools, and the Bible excluded, the indignation of the people, both at this place and at ———, was roused, that almost to a man they declared that their children should never go to a school where the Scriptures were not allowed to be daily read, as they had been accustomed to. Under this feeling, they and the Clergyman applied to the Superintendent, and desired that a person might be sent amongst them who could keep daily and Sunday school, and read in the churches."

"An individual was soon found, and the people came forward with such subscription, that the future labors of the Society in these two places may be carried on effectively. It is purposed to put up a school house so soon as the means can be found. At present the branch Teacher divides his time, three days in each place alternately, and reading the Church Service in each Church once every Sabbath. This is an important branch, containing from six to seven hundred inhabitants, mostly protestant. The number in the daily school is 91, and in the Sunday school, 171."

From ———

"I went to ——— about a fortnight since, where I made an arrangement with Mr. ——— to commence school as on the 1st inst. Many of the planters who remain in the harbor this winter were then in the bay, consequently I could not see them. I do not think there will be more than thirty, if so many scholars, this winter; but we have now taken the ground, which I consider to be highly important. I have agreed with Mr. ——— for six months only, at the rate of £30 per annum. I could not induce him to undertake it for less. I fear but a very small portion of that sum will be raised in ———, and what will you say to me? Shall we suffer the enemy to come in? shall our Protestant children remain in ignorance, or receive worse than no instruction, because sufficient means cannot be raised by themselves? No, I answer; it must not be; the Christian people of England will not suffer it to be so. Ours is a charitable institution, and here are the objects on which to bestow charity, and most happy should we be to have a little more money entrusted to us. Soon after I last wrote you, Messrs. ——— called on me to say, that, under all circumstances, they should very much prefer that we should provide a school for the ———, as they felt more than ever averse to the principles advocated (viz. the exclusion of the Bible from the Schools); and by our undertaking it, they thought it would be securing Protestant instruction. I, of course, promised to do so, and to endeavour to get the room built on the spot selected. About £20 was contributed in ——— towards the erection of the room. Mr. ——— had previously engaged to give a subscription of £5, which he now makes £10, if we can go on with it; but I must have at least £40 from England, and with that sum I think we shall be able to do it, with what I can get here. I trust the Society will be able to do this much, as I fear we shall not succeed without it."

Such are some of the statements, affording ground for encouragement, and which could be multiplied almost to any extent. The blessings of a scriptural education in improving the conduct and character have become so apparent, that in many instances opposition has been exchanged for entreaty, and apathy for exertion. So many and so pressing are the applications made to the Committee, that, had they the necessary funds at their disposal, they would have no difficulty in largely increasing the number of schools. In several districts the people are not only willing but anxious to have a school conducted on the principles of the Society, and are prepared to do what they can to meet the expenses.

Six or seven schools at this moment require finishing and repairs, and many more might at once be erected in destitute places. And there is one reason which, at the present crisis, ought to weigh powerfully with every one who regards sound principle as essential to a right education, viz. the attempt which is being made in the colony to establish a system of education supported by a grant from the local legislature, analogous to that already in operation in Ireland. It is gratifying, however, to state, that hitherto, for the most part, this scheme has not met with approbation, which right feeling on the part of the people, may be chiefly attributed to the combined exertion of some influential persons, most of the clergy, some of the Wesleyan Missionaries, and the entire body of your teachers. And your Committee would gather from this fact an argument for strongly urging the friends of scriptural education to renewed and vigorous exertions.

They are, therefore, truly glad in being able to announce to this Meeting that the appeal has not been in vain which they recently put forth, at the instance of one generous individual, who offered £100 on condition that £500 more should be raised for the special object of enabling the Superintendent, on his return to Newfoundland, to complete the necessary repairs of some schools now unfinished, and to erect others in yet destitute places. And your Committee cannot close this portion of their Report without expressing their deep gratitude to those friends, many of whom have been the long and tried supporters of the Society, who have thus so readily and liberally contributed.

Nor must they omit to mention how deeply indebted the Society is to its indefatigable and devoted Superintendent, whose wisdom and vigilance, under God, have matured and watched over this Institution for the space of fourteen years; and, fostered by his continual care, it may be confidently hoped that, with the Divine blessing, it will soon become an instrument of much more extensive usefulness.

HOME PROCEEDINGS.

The remittances for the past year from Donations, Subscriptions, and Associations have amounted to £1686..19s..7d. This sum is less than that realized the preceding year, which is accounted for principally in the item of Donations and proceeds of Sermons, and partly to one or two of the more valuable Associations not having made their remittances. It is, however, satisfactory to state, that the annual subscriptions have increased; and though local impediments prevented several of the Associations, when visited, from having sermons or meetings as usual, yet, in the aggregate, the remittances from this source have nearly equalled those of the former year.

The contributions in Newfoundland, including £300, the Government grant, amount to £641..9s. reduced to sterling money. The entire receipts, therefore, of the Society have amounted to £2328..8s..7d. The payments during the same period have reached the sum of £2913..12s..4d., leaving a balance due to the Treasurer of £585..3s..9d. It may, however, be stated in explanation, that about £200 have been paid on account of Teachers' salaries for the year now commencing, which, added to the like sum from Associations not received in due time, will reduce the balance, properly, to something less than £200. Beyond this balance the Society has no other liabilities whatever*.

The Committee have again the pleasure to express their grateful acknowledgments to the active friends of the Society, especially to the Ladies of the various Associations, both in

* Several years ago an Auxiliary was formed in Edinburgh to the Canadian School Society in London, and a balance has since remained in the hands of the treasurer in Edinburgh, who has not been able, after much inquiry, to find out any representative of that Society in London now to whom it could be paid; and, understanding that the Society has been discontinued, the balance of £7..8s. is now paid over to the Newfoundland School Society (by the Treasurer in Edinburgh, M. N. Macdonald, Esq.), as being one whose object is most nearly allied to that for which the money was originally subscribed.

the metropolis and in different parts of the country; and they would respectfully solicit others who may have opportunity to co-operate with them. To such combination and active exertion the Society stands most deeply indebted. Nor would the Committee omit to express their gratitude to their clerical friends, who have rendered material assistance by kindly granting their pulpits, or preaching on behalf of the Society. Nothing, they feel, would tend so much to increase their funds as the opening of pulpits, from which to make known the claims of the colonies generally, and the character and wants of this Society: they would hope, therefore, in the ensuing year, that more of the Clergy will afford them such invaluable aid. It is with peculiar satisfaction the Committee have to record their thanks to the long-tried friend and father of the Society, Samuel Codner, Esq., who has visited Edinburgh and Greenock for the Society, and through whose exertions Associations have been organized at Penrith, Carlisle, and Glasgow.

In addition to the liberal grants of the Religious Tract Society already mentioned, your Committee have the pleasure to add the following:—

From the British and Foreign Bible Society, 2000 copies of the Scriptures.

From the Prayer-Book and Homily Society, a grant of Prayer-books and Homilies.

From the Sunday School Society, 3500 spelling books.

Several other presents of books from different friends your Committee have to acknowledge, among which may be mentioned, 10 vols. of the valuable Sermons of the late Rev. Henry Gauntlett, from Miss Gauntlett; and from some Ladies connected with the City of London Ladies' Association, a donation of useful clothing of the value of £47.

Such gifts of books, especially of sound and scriptural sermons, are extremely valuable where the Teachers are called upon to read to the people in the absence of Ministers of the Gospel.

To their noble President the Committee feel they cannot express in suitable terms their sense of his Lordship's deep interest and continued attention to the concerns of the Society, and especially for a valuable gift of suitable books, to the amount of upwards of £40, which his Lordship purchased from the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

Your Committee would now conclude their Report by once more earnestly entreating their friends, and the religious public generally, deeply to consider the claims of our colonial fellow-subjects. They feel assured that, in this day of Christian philanthropy, the rapidly extending population and spiritual wants of our colonies will no longer fail to call forth adequate liberality on the part of a Christian public. Facts are before the public that must awake attention to this deeply interesting subject. If those facts establish a wide-spread destitution, both moral and religious, and exhibit no machinery commensurate with the evil, it becomes a question of paramount importance, whether, with these facts before us, if we sit still, we are not verily guilty concerning our brethren, in that we see the evil of their case, and regard it not. Surely recent events must have contributed to excite in the breast of every thinking man an anxious solicitude for the real prosperity both of England and her Colonies. And your Committee believe that a nation's prosperity will be in exact ratio with the moral health of the people, and this again in the same degree as the moral atmosphere becomes charged with the salutary influence of religion. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach unto any people." Let the rising generation, whether at home or abroad, be instructed in the truths of the Bible, and you teach them the path of obedience; let them be influenced by the principles of the Bible, and you make them happy. Sound policy and the command of God, the interests of time, and the far weightier interests of eternity, proclaim aloud the wisdom of training the young to an early love and enlightened acquaintance with the Holy Scriptures. Would we have loyal subjects? Loyalty in that book is based on its sure foundation,—the fear and the ordinance of God.

Would we have a peaceful community? It is that book which teaches the duty and supplies the motive. "Honour all men; love the brotherhood." Would we witness strict integrity and right principle exercising their hallowed influence in all the relationships of life?—it can never be till the Bible becomes the principle and the test of human action. To furnish an education of this kind to the children of the poor of Newfoundland—and if, in the good providence of God, the Society should ever possess the means, to our Canadian fellow-subjects—is the grand object for which your Society was established. Much good has already been done by it: God has blessed its labours, and nothing seems wanting to its more extended usefulness but increased support. Let, then, the friends of religion and of a Bible education in this day, when, alas! many there are that disesteem and despise such education, bestir themselves, and remember the command of God, "These words thou shalt teach diligently to thy children." Let them, as they look over their list of charities, weigh well the claims which the children of the poor in our colonies have upon them for sound instruction; and while their hearts kindle at hearing the glad tidings of the trophies of the cross in heathen lands, let them remember, however touching and sublime may sound the praises of Immanuel's name from the lips of once degraded savages, the sentiment is no less true than beautiful—

When the sweet music of the blest
Is echoed from an Infant's breast,
The Lord of Heaven delights to hear.

miracles which He wrought. The healing of diseases and the mastery over death, were credentials, which the whole world might read to the divinity of His embassy : but occasionally, the witness is of a less palpable character, but not on that account of a less persuasive. You will observe, from a variety of notices, that the whole map of the progress of Christianity was spread before our Lord—so that He knew, with an accuracy, which mortal foresight could never have imparted, each step in the advance of the religion which He instituted. And the most singular point we take to be, that He predicted results which would have seemed of all others the least likely to happen. Had the results which He predicted been those which might naturally have been expected, we might have resolved into human sagacity what we now ascribe to Divine prescience : but if the predicted effects are the opposite to those which the assigned causes seem adapted to produce, and if the result verify the prediction, we are almost necessitated to conclude, that the speaker had an acquaintance with the future, which belongs not to any finite being ; and it is under this class of predictions that our text must be arranged.

On mere human computation, the preaching of the cross is, of all engines, the least likely to effect a moral revolution amongst men. It would have been easy for Mahomet to predict that, by the processes which should be employed for the promulgation of his doctrines, multitudes of adherents would be gathered to his standard. When the sword was to hew down the refractory, and the faithful were promised a paradise in which the wine-cup should sparkle, and the cheek of beauty smile, it required no vast shrewdness to calculate that the pretensions of the false prophet were likely to be favourably received. Give man a religion which flatters his pride, or which panders to his passions, and you will not be long in surrounding yourself with votaries. But you should carefully observe how little there is in the doctrine of the cross, which could seem to adapt it for making way on earth. That all dependance is to be placed on the merits of a crucified Redeemer; that His death is to be our life; His blood shedding, the sole procuring cause of the forgiveness of sin—these, the glorious and fundamental truths of the Gospel, are practically the great stumbling-blocks to its reception. The words of the apostle have lost nothing of their force in the lapse of centuries, for to them that perish, the preaching of the cross is still “foolishness.” We may go the round of nominal Christianity, and wherever we find self-righteousness, or Antinomianism—the idolatry of works, or the neglect of works (which is just as bad)—we shall find that an imperfect reception of the doctrine of the cross, lies at the root of the evil; and even the indifference and opposition to religion in general, which characterize the great mass of our community, are to be traced to repugnance to this doctrine. The doctrine can make no compromise with human pride; and it wages interminable war with human passion. If I receive it, then, from its very nature, I become pledged to the crucifixion of the flesh, with its affections and lusts. If I am an idolater of intellect, I must throw to the ground the censor in which I have burnt incense; if I am an indulger of appetite, I must place a bridle where I have given the reins. If I delight in accumulating the gold and silver, I must count as dross what has engaged my affections. It cannot for an instant be concealed, even from the dullest of calculators, that, in becoming the disciples of a self-denying and crucified Lord, we pledge ourselves to a holy and determined war with sin; and on this simple account, the whole array of carnal emotions is in arms against the Gospel. So that it is not too much too say, that even when the claims of the Christian religion are outwardly admitted, the lifting up of the Saviour is virtually the impediment to His triumphs.

Yea, and if you go back, for an instant, to earlier scenes, and remember the difficulties with which Christianity had to struggle at the outset, you will readily discern that the crucifixion of its Founder was of all things the most calculated to shut up the world to an obstinate rejection of its claims. It would have seemed enough to have told the polished nations of antiquity that the Author of this new faith, had died as a malefactor, by the hands of his own countrymen, in order to have riveted them to a contemptuous infidelity, and to have for ever closed all inquiry into the truths of those announcements which apostles were busied in proclaiming in their cities. Yet it was in the face of all this apparent likelihood, nay, of this absolute certainty, of vehement opposition, that Christ made the representation in our text. We are not at present concerned with the fulfilment of His prophecy in its largest sense; we have only to observe, that whilst the preaching of the cross has been, and is “foolishness” to them that perish—to them that are saved, it has been, and is, “the power of God.” In spite of what we have advanced respecting the antipathy of the men of every age to this doctrine, preaching has been successful in the exact proportion, that it has been the preaching of the cross. When the ministers of Christ have given out the truth in simplicity—when there has been the least of endeavour to smooth down what is rugged, or to varnish over what is distasteful to the natural heart, multitudes both of men and of women have been added to the church. And if you combine the facts on which we have insisted—the fact, that nothing could have appeared less likely to produce a moral revolution than the preaching of the cross, and the fact that nevertheless to this preaching must be referred whatever moral revolution has been actually produced—you can hardly fail to allow, that the Being who uttered our text, must have had a keener view of the future than could be gained by mere human foresight. He prophesied (if you will allow me the expression)—He prophesied against probabilities; He affirmed that results could be brought round, which, on the commonest principles of human calculation, were sure not to be brought round. He took as it were, the offensive part of His system of religion—the part which every one decides must be kept in the back ground, if you would not have the whole contemptuously rejected; and He declared that this very part should be the engine for the subjugation of the whole family of man. And by thus freeing Himself from all earthly computations, and dealing with the future as none could have dealt, who could only have applied to its secret the shrewdness of a guess, or the reckoning of a finite arithmetic, He as powerfully manifested His Divinity as when He poured light upon the darkened eye-ball, or hushed the waters, or broke up the sepulchres: and we commend it to you all as a line of argument worth following out in your own meditations—the prediction of improbable results, a proof of more than human wisdom. It was quite improbable the Gospel would prove a sword on the earth; it was quite improbable that the preaching of the cross would be effectual and influential preaching. Had Jesus, therefore, spoken only as a man, He would not have spoken in the very teeth of probabilities. He might have predicted what was false, but at least He would have predicted what was likely. And hence we reckon our text amongst those internal evidences of Christianity, which are all the more valuable because indirect: and connecting the prophecy with the fulfilment, we feel, that had not Christ spoken by the Spirit of God, He never could, and He never would have said, “And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me.”

But let us now leave that view of our text which has to do with the evidences of Christianity. The text itself is a prophecy, and of the very widest scope. Christ declares, that He will draw all men to Him; and He cannot, therefore, be considered as meaning that He will draw none but true believers. The image, which most naturally suggests itself to the mind on reading the declaration, is that of the loadstone attracting on all sides the iron to itself. But this is a defective image; the loadstone draws only one kind of substance; Christ declares that He will draw all men, however diverse their character. Some of the ancient philosophers, observing the attractive power of the earth, by which various bodies are made to fall towards its surface, inclined to the opinion that the earth itself was one huge loadstone: Sir Isaac Newton fairly argued that the earth attracts a feather as much as a piece of iron; whereas the loadstone attracts only iron and he therefore contended there could be nothing analogous between the loadstone and the earth. Now it will follow from this, that if we are to have imagery at all, Christ must be thought to have ascribed to Himself the properties of the earth rather than of the loadstone: the earth draws all to itself, and Christ lifted up is to draw all to Himself. Some bodies, indeed, are so light that they float in the air, and fall not towards the earth: but this is not because the earth attracts them not, but simply because the air resists their descent. If there were no air, the tiniest leaf would fall as rapidly as a mass of lead. And here we cannot but observe a beautiful analogy. Only a few are actually drawn to Christ, the great mass of men continue at a distance. But Christ, like the earth, attracts all—though, as with the earth, all come not to Him. He died for all; He sends out the message of reconciliation to all; He offered himself as a sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of all; and He procured for men the gift of the Spirit, which He is ready to bestow upon all. Why, then, are not all literally drawn unto Him? Oh! just because there is a carnal atmosphere round them, which neutralizes as it were, the attractive power; and thousands float in it, who, if it were destroyed, would rush eagerly to Jesus as their centre. So that in these respects the earth, though not the loadstone, is the exact emblem of Christ; there is attractive virtue enough in each case to draw all; but in each case there is also a resisting medium which prevents the lighter bodies from descending. And it is possible, that this is something more than imagery, and ought to be received as interpretation. It is clear that the fact of one substance drawing another, does not depend on the two being actually brought into contact. The earth draws the feather as much as it draws the lead; yet the feather falls not, and the lead rushes. Thus with Christ: it is not that He did not die for all; it is not that He does not love all; it is not that He does not invite all; and therefore we cannot be warranted in saying that He does not draw all—just as the earth draws all. But the feather of the unstable and worldly mind descends not, whilst the lead of the weary and heavy laden spirit approaches him rapidly. All are drawn; but one is inflated with vanity, and therefore floats; another is burdened with sin, and therefore falls. So that by illustration, at least, if not by argument, we make out that Christ might say of Himself that He would draw all, and yet know that all would not come to Him for life.

We think it, however, probable—and upon this we would touch before adducing further illustration—that our Lord referred to His appointment as Judge of quick and dead; which appointment was the direct result or recompence of His crucifixion. You find St. Paul saying, “We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ.” Why? “For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to Me, and every tongue shall confess to God.” You observe that the standing of all men before the judgment-seat of Christ is referred to as completing a magnificent prophecy, which has to do with the bending of every knee and the confession of every tongue. And since it is further asserted in Scripture, that Christ’s sitting as Judge is one of the consequences of His being “lifted up” on the cross, you may readily see that all will bow to Him, and that all will confess to Him, when He sits at the last day upon His throne; and that this universal bending and confessing will be owing, in the strictest sense, to His crucifixion.

Our text, then, might be thus paraphrased. ‘And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, shall thereby obtain appointment to the Judgeship of quick and dead; but by being Judge of all, I shall compel all to do homage before Me, or draw all, in one way or another, to Myself. Hence I may say at once, that “I, if I be lifted up from the earth, shall draw all men to me.”’ And we are confirmed in such an interpretation, by observing, that in the verse immediately preceding our text, Christ had said, “Now is the judgment of this world; now is the prince of this world cast out.” So that He himself most clearly associated His being lifted up” from the earth with the judgment of the earth. And it is altogether an august contemplation—this of the Mediator seated on the great white throne, and thereby becoming the resistless centre of attraction. Even now, as we have already explained, He draws all, just as the earth draws all. But though “the gold and the silver and the precious stones,” being solid and weighty, fall eagerly towards Him, “the wood and the hay and the stubble,” being light and unstable, float away to a distance: but the brilliant corruscations, which are to go out from the throne and retinue of judgment, shall destroy, as it were, every particle of the carnal atmosphere; and then must it come to pass, that the very stubble and wood shall be drawn towards the universal magnet; but drawn only that, if it be wood, the collision may dash it to shivers, and, if it be stubble, light it up with the burnings of eternity. The wicked and the impenitent, they may have their confidences and dependencies while they are still on earth—they may have their devices and pleas and excuses, which they think will bear them well up in the day of account; but the magnet shall do to them just what the load stone would do to a ship, if it were to draw out the nails from her timbers—it shall take away their boasted fastenings, and leave them a wreck in the eddy of ruin. And then, when all men who have ever lived, shall be brought before the Judge—these, attracted towards Him that they might share in His glories, and those that they might be broken into pieces by the rod of His indignation—will there be the full and the unqualified accomplishments of the saying, “And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.”

But it cannot be necessary, in endeavouring to show the fulfilment of the prophecy of our text, that we seek only for what will accomplish it in the most unrestricted sense. We will pass, therefore, to more general, but not less interesting illustrations. We would take the words of Christ as descriptive, in a degree, of what has happened in every age since their delivery, and what will occur in all future time—yea, and throughout eternity itself. It was the prediction of the dying Jacob, in reference to the coming of Shiloh or Messiah, “Unto Him shall the gathering of the people be.” Here, as in our text, Christ is represented as the centre of attraction, towards which should be drawn from the whole human community, the material of that church which is to be for ever the great trophy of omnipotence. And we all know, that though the Jews, to whom the Gospel was first preached, rejected as a nation the offer of mercy, yet multitudes have pressed forward to occupy the place which ought to have been theirs, and to prove that the great system of reconciliation has not in vain been planned, and not in vain executed. When the Saviour had ascended up on high, and led captivity captive, he sent down the Holy Spirit, that Divine agent, whose special office it is to convince the world of sins of righteousness, and of judgment. And this Spirit, though it strove without effect with the great mass of the Jews, and was forced at last to abandon them to the wretchedness justly their own, prevailed on many of their hardened community to acknowledge Jesus as their deliverer, and then employ their instrumentality in scattering good seed over the wide waste of heathenism. The drawing, or gathering of the nations, was thus commenced, and soon made rapid progress. Supported by no human authority—yea, discountenanced and opposed, and derided by all that seemed likely to ensure success to their enterprize, the first teachers of Christianity went the round of the globe, and planted the cross in its vallies and on its mountains. The abominations of superstition shrunk from the light which flowed from the cross; and there was speedily a trembling in the temples of the idols; and though the great serpent mustered all his forces to the battle calling in the aid of persecuting princes, and stirring up against the new sect the passions and powers of a world lying in wickedness—yet was the cause, the cause of God; and it prospered and prevailed; and opposition gave way, and darkness was scattered, and idols were demolished. Then was the first great drawing of the nations to the crucified; the Roman empire professing Christianity, and Paganism being dethroned, if not altogether banished, from the vast territories which that empire included. And though, undoubtedly, at this period, and at every subsequent, there was a fearful disproportion between the amount of real and nominal Christianity, yet can we be certain, that at no time have true worshippers of Jesus ceased from among men, nor has the visible church been altogether destitute of members of the invisible. The drawing of all men has gone on in days of the greatest darkness and oppression; for whenever the Spirit has operated on the conscience of a solitary sinner, and stirred him to a sense of moral peril, and induced him to flee to Jesus for refuge—then has the prophecy before us received a new, though partial fulfilment, or another being has been brought out of native alienation, and gathered unto Him who was lifted up upon the cross. And we thank God, that we can affirm this of every age of Christianity. We thank God, that even when national impiety has been at its height, and there have been but few and faint manifestations of reverence for the Saviour who died in man's stead—there has been a faithful remnant unto whom Christ has been precious, who have rested on His merits, and found delight in His promises. Aye, there is not one amongst yourselves, whatever his worldly condition, however little known, and however little cared for who, if indeed a believer in the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, may not regard himself as one of that mighty throng which passed before the view of the uplifted Mediator. It is this Mediator to whom he hath been drawn. He may at first have had recourse to other deliverers, imagining that wrath might be escaped, and yet not in the way opened up by the Gospel; but the Spirit which has roused him from lethargy, and caused him to feel anxious as to the saving of the soul, would not suffer him to find rest in any thing but the atonement. He has therefore been driven from one attempted refuge to another, proving successively by experience, the worthlessness of each—till, at length, drawn into the discipleship of the only begotten of the Father, his every fear has been dispersed, and his every sin pardoned.

It would not be true that to Christ is the drawing of all men, if there were another name given under heaven besides His, by which the guilty might be saved: but now that there is deliverance through this Mediator for all in every land, who are willing to receive it as the free gift of God, and none, except through this Mediator, for a solitary individual in a single district of the earth—we can affirm the Divine and irreversible appointment, that the weary and the heavy laden must be drawn to Christ, or remain for ever burdened and laden with their iniquity. And they are drawn to Christ;

He is sending out His ministers to every section of the globe, and His Spirit is everywhere accompanying the message, and making it mighty to the casting down the strongholds of ignorance and of unbelief. In one quarter and another—one of this family, and two of that—the nations are being subdued to Messiah; and, though much may be wanting to that magnificent ingathering on which prophecy delights to pour all its splendid imagery, when the kingdoms of the earth shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, and the whole human population bowing at the name of the Redeemer—still there is enough, yea, abundantly enough to prove, that all of which prophets have spoken shall yet be gloriously exhibited on the stage of this creation. And we say again, that every one to whom Christ is made of God wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, swells the fulfilment of such a prediction as that in our text. The Saviour has not been compelled to say of this individual as He said of the impenitent Jerusalem—"How often would I have gathered you as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings! but ye would not." There has been in this case a yielding to admonition and entreaty brought to bear on wickedness. There has been a hearkening in faith to the message, which tells of a condemnation beneath which the world lies; and of a pardon which asks nothing but acceptance. There has been a clinging to promises, which are "yea and amen" in the Mediator; which never could have been made, that is, had not the Mediator pledged Himself as our Surety; and never have been performed, had He not made good His suretiship. So that the converted man has been translated from the kingdom of Satan, to the kingdom of God's dear Son; and that too, through an agency which could never have been turned on the seed of the apostate had there not been the interference of that Saviour who was promised so soon as Adam fell, and lifted up on the cross in the fullness of time. Therefore it is, in every sense true, that he has been drawn to the Saviour: the work of mediation has procured for him all those means and assistances which have been available to the renewal of his nature, and that title to an incorruptible inheritance, which could never have been gained by any labours of his own. Hence it is not only the Saviour to whom he has fled—it is the Saviour from whom he has obtained ability to flee; and as he springs from the trammels of corruption, and rises into communion with heavenly things, and approaches nearer and nearer to God—Oh! he is from first to last, but a continual demonstration how justly the Redeemer predicted of Himself—"I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me."

One more illustration, before I proceed to the business of the evening. If we can plead that prophecy has already received, and is constantly receiving, a partial accomplishment—are not coming days charged with its unrestricted fulfilment? It is possible (as we have already intimated) that the gaze of the Saviour, when uttering this prediction, was on the glorious and palmy days of Christianity—days for which the faithful from the beginning, have earnestly longed, and on which inspired writers have lavished all the majesty of their descriptions. Who knows not that Scripture delineates a season, at which an end shall be put to the disorders and misrule under which the earth hath long groaned, and all human sovereignty yield to that of Him who shall have on His vesture and His thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS? Who knows not that, however Christianity has long been depressed, and however inconsiderable its progress to universal dominion—a day has to dawn—if indeed there be truth in the assertion of prophets—when every false religion shall give place to the true, and when, in all its circumference, the globe shall be crowded with the willing subjects of the Lord our Redeemer. And when this glorious and triumphant estate shall have succeeded to one of constant combat and frequent defeat, what prediction will receive a more signal accomplishment, than that which forms our subject of discourse? "It shall come to pass," saith Isaiah, "in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it." I seem to behold this mighty congregation, of every people, and every tribe: they have cast their idols to the moles and to the bats; they have started from lethargy and superstition, and are pressing into the general assembly and church of the first born. Every valley is sending forth its thousands, on every mountain side is a rejoicing company; and every island, as it towers upon the waters, is crested with evidence, that Christ is there worshipped. "They shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know Him, from the least to the greatest." We know this, for we have "the sure word of prophecy, whereunto we do well if we take heed." And knowing this, we have only to look onward to days, which will break ere long on our polluted creation. And as we behold with the eye of faith, the earth turned into one noble temple, and that temple consecrated to Christ; and listen to the roll of one universal anthem, issuing simultaneously from every dwelling-place of man, and that anthem, "Worthy, worthy is the Lamb that was slain;" we have before us the scene which fixed, it may be, the gaze of Christ upon the cross, and we compass all the grandeur of His assertion, that, if lifted up, He would draw all men to Himself. And yet not all the grandeur, we look forward to a yet sublimer scene, to a yet mightier gathering. The millennial season, splendid as it will be, and full of glory, is to terminate; and then are the new heavens and the new earth to arise, as the everlasting home of those who, in every age, have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Mediator. Whilst the millenium lasts, the drawing may not bring into close association, the members of the church, who have lived at different periods; but when the general judgment shall have passed, and time shall be lost in eternity—

then shall there be but one vast family, and of this family, shall Christ be the centre. The first parents of our race, the patriarchs, who possessed the earth when yet fresh in its beauty—the priests and the prophets of early dispensations, with the many who discerned the Antitype in the sacrifices which the one offered and hung delightedly on, and the strains which the others poured forth—the apostles, the first preachers of our faith, with innumerable multitudes, who, in successive generations, have embraced the truth, they were charged to proclaim—a multitude collected from far-parted lands, from every shore on which the ocean beats, from every spot on which the sun shines—these shall be combined into one brilliant assembly, and follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. We may believe that, throughout eternity, Christ will continue to draw all men to Him; still will He be the point, towards which shall converge whatsoever hath been delivered from the consequences of apostacy—still will He be the source of gladness, the well-spring of happiness, to the myriads who have entered heaven through the virtue of His blood; to Him shall the ransomed flock, and around Him shall they congregate, and from Him shall they derive accessions of knowledge, and fresh materials of triumph: and this will be the final drawing of the nations. When the men of every age, and of every land, linked in indissoluble brotherhood, shall crowd towards the Mediator as their common Deliverer, their all in all, and cast their crowns at His feet, and sweep their harps to His praise; Oh! then will the prophecy receive its full and splendid accomplishment, and all orders of intelligence, connecting the crucifixion as a cause with this ingathering, will bear its enraptured witness to the thorough verification of the words, “And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me.”

And would to God, men and brethren, that none of us may be missing from this illustrious assemblage. There is yet room for all: heaven is not full, but still opens its ample palaces to those who, by transgression, have forfeited immortality: we may be all numbered amongst those, whom the Saviour shall send His angels to gather from the four corners of the earth. But shall we be? God alone knows—but of this we are sure, there is not one of us, who would not shudder at the thought of being wanting at the great gathering of the people, not one who does not cherish some kind of hope that he shall be reckoned with the ransomed—not one, on whom is laid the necessity of absence from the shining throng, and of having no hope, but what shall make ashamed. It remains, therefore, that each examine for himself, whether he has ever yet fled for refuge to the Saviour. If he have, let him not fear, for Christ's sheep never perish, neither can any pluck them out of their Father's hand. If he have not, let him not despair; there is yet time to be drawn, only let him not delay, lest in pausing for a moment, he may be lost for eternity.

And are we to be—can we be—content to be drawn ourselves, whilst thousands on every side of us are not similarly attracted? Impossible! There is no more necessary result of conversion, than the wish to convert others. Christian blessings are those which, the more we feel them to be our own, the more we shall desire to communicate. But whilst anxious to have all, in every land, drawn to Christ—there will be some who ought, in a special degree, to engage our attention. You will remember the words of the apostle, “If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel”—words which show the duty of concerning ourselves with the interests of those more immediately connected with us, before engaging in the enterprises of a wider philanthropy. And we cannot but think, that the apostle's principle of providing specially for our own, has not been sufficiently attended to in our endeavours at diffusing the Gospel. I am not, you may be sure, about to depreciate the labours of missionary societies, instituted for the noble purpose of striving to evangelize the heathen: I would to God, that there were a thousand-fold more zeal amongst us, a thousand-fold more energy, in assaulting the colossal superstitions, which still oppress many of the fairest portions of our globe. Would to God that the fountains of Gospel truth were bubbling amid the deserts of Africa, and the songs of Zion circulating through the palm-groves of the East. Nevertheless, the inhabitants of Africa and the East are not our own, in the sense that the settlers in our various colonies are: and if we have been embarking in enterprises for advancing the moral well-being of those who are not our own, whilst we have been comparatively neglectful of that of those who are, there must lie against us something of the heavy charge advanced by the apostle—the charge of being actually “worse than the infidel.” That there has been a criminal neglect of our own, can be questioned only by those who are ignorant of the matters of fact. Our colonies—the appendages which swell the majesty and might of the British empire, and into which so many thousands of our countrymen are annually drafted—what has been done—what is doing—towards providing for their spiritual wants? Let us turn to NEWFOUNDLAND; let us glance at its history, and then leave it to yourselves to gather the answer.

The close of the fifteenth century is one of the most memorable periods in modern history. The world might then be said to have been doubled. Then it was, that, stirred by the pleadings of a resistless and ardent genius, and fired (as it would seem) with the thought of being destined to accomplish some of the mysterious predictions of Holy Writ, Christopher Columbus pushed forth on the waste of waters, and snatched one half the earth from the grave of more than five thousand years. It had almost happened, that this discovery of the vast continent of America had been a British, and not a Spanish achievement. The monarch, who then sat on the throne of this kingdom, knew that Columbus was wandering from Court to Court, in quest of a patron, and invited him to England. Circumstances interfered with his coming; and Columbus, having in the meantime obtained the countenance of the Spanish queen Isabella, set out to accomplish the enterprise. The spirit of endeavour had been roused in the British king; he equipped a Venetian, who had settled in Bristol—sent him westward—and the discovery of the northern continent of America and of the large island of Newfoundland was the result of the expedition. Thus it was, that Newfoundland became “our own” by discovery; it afterwards became more strictly “our own” by colonization; and it is in fact, the oldest of all our colonial dependencies. Three centuries have elapsed since its annexment to England. The extensive fisheries of this island have combined with other circumstances, to render it a place of considerable importance. It has been the nursery of our hardiest and bravest seamen, who, by plying their occupation off its wild and iron-bound coast, have acquired the daring and the vigour, which have given England under God her maritime ascendancy. The geographical extent of Newfoundland is scarcely less than that of England. Little or nothing however is known of the interior, except that it is covered by vast and unexplored wilds, which resist the progress of the traveller. Along the seacoast, remarkably broken as it is with creeks and bays, which prevent much intercourse, live a scattered population of about a hundred thousand souls. This population is almost entirely British, being annually increased by emigrants from the western parts of England, from Scotland, and especially from Ireland. We think, that this brief statement goes clearly to the showing you that the dwellers in Newfoundland are “our own;” and if it be bound on us to provide specially for “our own,” it must be bound on us to provide specially for the moral wants of this colony.

And will you believe, that our enlightened, and Protestant, and philanthropic and missionary country, has been neglectful of “her own?” Let facts speak for themselves. Fifteen years back—for, mark me, I am not carrying you into the dark middle ages—fifteen years back, there was only one free daily school in the whole island; and eleven years back, not more than one thousand children were receiving instruction, out of the thousands who wanted it. We emptied the surplus of our population into the harbours of Newfoundland, and we left them there to aggrandise our commerce, but we refused them the means of grace and instruction. I confine my observations to the want of the means of education—for it is this want, which the Society now supplying your support, has attempted to supply. There is, indeed, moreover a grievous deficiency in all that relates to public worship. Think of one church to a district of a hundred miles; think of eleven clergymen to about one hundred thousand souls—and this population scattered among the coves of more than fifteen hundred miles of winding coast, where there are no roads, and the rocks run down to the very margin of the sea. And who are the negligent, who leave these thousands thus destitute of the means of grace? Papists? Oh! no; Popery is not slack, Popery is not idle. The Roman Catholic Church puts the Reformed to the blush. We separated from that church because of its corruptions; and one would think from our practice, that we reckoned among those corruptions the spirit of proselytism—Nowhere is Popery more active than in Newfoundland; it takes advantage of Protestant supineness; it even ventures to persecute, which it is too politic to do except where it feels on sure ground. And it will make great way, unless you vastly strengthen the hands of this Society, through the countenance given to that spurious system of education, with which we are threatened here—a system adapted to all creeds, and therefore virtually having none. We are threatened with this system here; and if once introduced, more will be done towards undermining the Established Church, and therefore the Christianity of our people, than by a hundred fiercer and more open assaults. It is upon this matter of national education, that a stand must be made. The eyes of the clergy must be opened to this. The schemes which are afloat, and which all make religion a secondary thing, have a tendency the most direct to weaken the bonds of association between the church and the great body of the people, and thus to sap the foundations of our great Christian institutes. There is very little probability of legislators committing such an act of suicide, as to attempt the dissolution of the union between Church and State; the State gets more than it gives, and will calculate long, before at the call of any interested faction, it throws off its partner. There is little probability of the hand of violence being laid on our mitres and our benefices: this can only be when there comes a general scramble for property—for all rights are manifestly surrendered the moment those of the church are invaded. But the church may be more insidiously attacked—attacked through the education of the poor. Take that education from the parochial clergy; place it under that new dynasty, which is fast threatening to supersede all other power in this land of boasted freedom—a Board of Commissioners; and there will grow up about us an intellectual, but an unchristian population: and the church will sink, because bereft of its true support—that which it now has, that which (through the blessing of God) it will increasingly have—the affections of the thousands and the tens of thousands who feel the worth of its pastoral ministrations. And, God helping, this result shall not take place through any supineness on the part of the church. At home and abroad we will ply vigorously the work of education. THE NEWFOUNDLAND SOCIETY is doing much; but you must enable it to do more; enable it by annual subscriptions, and not only by casual donations: for the fixed usefulness of a Society is proportionate to its fixed income. It has upwards of 3,000 children on its books, but there are many thousands more who ought to be there; and you must enable it to enrol them. Besides, I have spoken only of Newfoundland; but the Society, you observe, bears "British North America" in its title. Yes, in its title; but, I grieve to tell you, not in its operations. Think of the Canadas—that most extensive portion of our colonial possessions—think of our other dependencies in North America. There are hundreds of thousands of our countrymen scattered over these enormous tracts: they have made appeals to this Society; they have conjured its agents to come over and help them; they have held up the picture of the rising generation starving for want of knowledge; and the Society is unable to stir a step; it cannot erect schools; it cannot dispatch teachers. The work of demoralization goes on triumphantly; and ignorance is left undisturbed, to eat away the vigour of thousands in whose veins are the flowings of British blood: and all because England—England that will send out missionaries to the Hottentot and to the Hindoo, and plant the cross among the snows of Lapland, and the sands of Arabia—England will not rouse herself at the cry of her own children; but, worse than the infidel parent, will give liberally to the stranger, and provide not for her own. Canadas! who marvels at hearing of insurrection? How should a neglected population be well ordered? How should an uneducated population be loyal? And now what is the specific for the Canadas? What course will an enlightened Government take? Surely to increase the means of Christian instruction and the number of Christian teachers. Ah! no. Lop of a Protestant Bishop, and put on a Papal: send out a few regiments, and withdraw the grants from the clergy. This is the Protestant recipe for the manufacture of good order, and industry, and loyalty. Any sword rather than the sword of the Spirit; and any retinue rather than a retinue of chaplains.

Well, if the Government will not do its part, the Christian public must. We must have the voluntary principle when we cannot get legal provision. And our quarrel with the voluntary principle, in this and every other case, is its utter inadequacy: if it would do the work of Government, there could be nothing to object to; but this it has never done, and, we believe, never will do. But we must push it as far as possible; if we cannot thoroughly provide the means of Christian education for the Canadas and Newfoundland, let us provide it up to the full of our ability. And we call on you now for aid—liberal aid. In the sublimest of the visions vouchsafed to the church, God manifested His will that, as fast as lands were discovered and peopled, they should be visited by the preachers of the Gospel—and how was that commandment to St. John introduced? “Thou must prophecy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.” There descended a mighty angel; his face was as the sun; a rainbow was on his head, and his feet were as pillars of fire: and this mighty angel set his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth, and sware a sublime oath touching the completion of the mystery of God. By this angel it was, thus standing on the sea and the earth, that St. John was directed to prophecy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings. And why this attitude? Why, the right foot on the sea? Oh, might it not have been a prophetic indication that there lay shrouded in the bosom of the waters vast territories, whose extent was then unsuspected, but which, in the progress of time, would emerge from the deep, like a new creation, and double the sphere of the missionary’s expatiations? The right foot on the sea, and the left on the land—it might have been to show that the sea had its continents and its islands, where the Roman eagle never flew, but which, rising hereafter from the sepulchre of centuries, should present new tracts on which to erect the banner of the cross. We obey the prophetic summons. Whilst there is a shore on which the foot of the missionary hath not trodden, we will consider our office unfulfilled as entrusted with the oracles of God. Whilst there is a human being who hath never heard the tidings of redemption, we will not relax in prophesying again before nations and tongues. Yet our own shall have our first care. The islands which rose out of the sea on which the angel trod, at the call of our own discoverers, shall be attended to first—and, though ignorance may be there, and superstition, and opposition under various forms, do Thou, O God, go forth with our armies; and there shall be a triumphant and ever-growing demonstration, that Christ indeed spake in the spirit of prophecy, when He declared, “And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me.”

NEWFOUNDLAND SCHOOL SOCIETY.

"Extract from the Record Newspaper of Thursday, May 3, 1838, at the proceedings of the Anniversary Meeting of the Society."

THE Fifteenth Anniversary Meeting of this Society was held on Thursday last, at Exeter Hall. The attendance was highly respectable, and much more numerous than we have seen at former meetings.

At twelve o'clock,

Lord BEXLEY took the chair, after which, the Rev. J. Haslegrave invoked the Divine blessing on the proceedings of the day.

Lord BEXLEY then briefly stated the object of the Meeting. At all times, and under any circumstances, the meeting of a Society whose object was the diffusion of education based on Scripture principles would be an object of interest; but at the present moment the meeting of such a Society was peculiarly interesting. The events which had unhappily occurred recently in some of our North American colonies showed—if indeed any thing could be required to show—the great advantages which would be derived from sound Christian education, and forcibly pointed out the evils which arose from the want of it. Had a system of early scriptural instruction such as this Society proposed to give—and had for a considerable time given—been extended years ago in those colonies, the scenes which had been lately witnessed there, and which had deluged their once peaceful fields with blood, would not have taken place. With such scenes fresh in their recollection, the friends of this Society would, he trusted, be stimulated to renewed exertion in extending as widely as possible the benefits of scriptural education. He would not detain the Meeting with any farther remarks, but would call their attention to the Report about to be read by the Secretary, which would give a very satisfactory detail of the proceedings of the Society in the past year.

The SECRETARY then read the Report, which clearly showed that the exertions of the Society's agents had been unremitting in prosecuting their good work, and that they had been attended with corresponding success. The Report added, that there was a great want of teachers, and that if the means were afforded of sending out additional and well-qualified teachers, the best results might be expected from their exertions. The Society has forty-six schools, and has given instruction to upwards of 9,000 scholars.

The amount of remittances, arising from donations and subscriptions, was 1,686*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, which was somewhat less than last year. The sum collected in Newfoundland was 611*l.* 19*s.*, making in all, including the 300*l.* given by the local Government, the sum of 2,328*l.* 8*s.* 7*d.* The payments made in the last year amounted to 2,913*l.*; but of this about 200*l.* had been paid in advance, and some of the Associations had not made their remittances. The Report also acknowledged the receipt of 2,000 copies of the Holy Scriptures from the British and Foreign Bible Society; also a large supply of loan libraries and tracts from the Religious Tract Society, spelling-books from the Sunday-School Society, and several donations of clothing from some ladies.

Lord MOUNTSANDFORD came forward to move that the Report, of which an abstract had just been read, be adopted, and that the gentlemen named in a list read should be the Committee for the ensuing year. The Noble Lord observed, that the Report, which was clear and simple in its details, was most satisfactory in its statements as to the progress of the Society.

The Hon. the CHIEF JUSTICE of NEWFOUNDLAND, in seconding the motion, bore testimony to the great good produced by this Society. Very many of the inhabitants, who were now reaping the advantages of an education based on sound Christian principles, would, but for the exertion of this Society, have remained destitute of this blessing up to the present time. He was sorry to say, that the Society did not receive that encouragement to which it had so many good claims. An attempt was being made in the colony to establish schools excluding the Bible. He offered no comment on the fact, but it was as he stated it; but he must observe that no system of education could be good which was not founded on Scripture principles. Such instruction was necessary in all places; but more particularly in a colony circumstanced as Newfoundland, where so many were still living in the greatest ignorance of the Lord Jesus. If the enthusiasm with which the large hall of that building had rung a few days ago was so great at the bare mention of negro emancipation from two short years of servitude, how much greater ought it to be at the emancipation of many of our Christian brethren from the slavery of sin? (Hear, hear.) He avowed that, in his opinion, the emancipation from ignorance and sin was the more important, and ought to call forth our warmest sympathies. (Hear, hear.) He should be glad to see large audiences applauding sentiments delivered in favour of emancipation from sin. The Hon. and Learned Gentleman then went on to inculcate on the Meeting the necessity of attending to the education of the poor. It was the duty of kings, who were the parents of a nation, to see that the people were properly instructed, and where, from political or other causes, this duty was neglected, it was incumbent on those who possessed the means to see that instruction should be given. There was one thing which he should suggest before he sat down. This Society was a School Society, and had means of giving instruction, and of disseminating Bible principles, which few others possessed, but the Society should extend its operations by the ordination of ministers to preach the Gospel. From the want of ministers a vast number of the descendants of the ancient Protestants had become Roman Catholics. In Placentia, the ancient capital of the island, there was still a church, but there was no one to use it. There was not more than one or two Protestant families in that part of the island, because there was no one to instruct them. As an illustration of their destitution in that respect, he might mention, that a service of communion-plate, the gift of his late Majesty, when Duke of Clarence, was still in the church, but there was no one to use it. Now, a remedy for this state of things might be found by having respectable and well-instructed men ordained and sent out to preach the Gospel in the colony. He did not want men with high academical distinctions and classical attainments. There were no funds from which to give the income that such men would naturally expect; but as these could not be had, he would, on the principle that half a loaf was better than no bread, have men well instructed in English, and having a sound knowledge of their religion and of the Holy Scriptures on which it was based. These would mix amongst the poor people, who were the most in want of instruction, and would be more fit teachers for them than men of high literary attainments. Many who were now in darkness would be brought to a knowledge of the Truth, and that system of proselytism which was now going on in the island would receive a salutary check. For such purpose, however, funds would be necessary, and he earnestly hoped that the friends of Newfoundland, and of scriptural education, would exert themselves to raise the sums which would be required to procure that invaluable blessing for the colony.

The resolution was then put, and agreed to.

GEORGE FINCH, Esq. moved the next resolution, to this effect, "That deeply convinced that the Word of God is the only basis of sound and useful education, and that in this principle are involved the highest interests of man, and, above all, the glory of Almighty God, this Meeting desire to record their high sense of privilege and obligation which this Society sustains in having been permitted for fifteen years as a witness to exhibit the practical benefits of scriptural education in Newfoundland." The Hon. Gentleman observed, that this was a resolution which required no eloquence to support it. It would, however, be recommended by the clergy, who, he was glad to see were the most prominent advocates of Institutions like the present. The most striking, and, at the same time, the most attractive feature of this Society was, that its chief object was to impart instruction to the poor—to those whose labours, hardships, and privations, entitled them to our best sympathies. Would it not be a delightful feeling to comfort and solace the minds of our poor and suffering brethren, by pointing out to them that there was a home to which they might look after the termination of their earthly labours for sweet and everlasting rest? It was consolatory to learn, as they had, from the Report, that so many children were being reared up in true Christian principles; that is, that they were deriving the benefits of an education based on the Holy Scriptures; but it was no slight drawback on this feeling to consider that the mass of the inhabitants of this ancient British colony were yet without the means of sound education. The great mistake of our modern philosophers was the assertion of this principle, that knowledge placed within the reach of man, would, when acquired by him, bring with it an improvement of his moral condition, independently of religion. This absurd and wicked principle would be triumphantly refuted by a reference to the condition of the Greeks and Romans. They excelled in all the knowledge which human reason could suggest, and in all the arts which human skill and ingenuity had to that time devised; but their knowledge had not debasing superstitions and disgusting vices and immoralities. But, to come down to our own times, we had, in the French Revolution, and its frenzied theories and sanguinary horrors, afforded another illustration of the effects of unsanctified knowledge—that knowledge producing in man a restless and unquiet spirit, which can be kept down only by the musket or the bayonet. What was mere learning without religion? (Hear, hear.) The Hon. Gentleman here entered at some length into a contrast between the fundamental principles of Protestantism and Popery—that of the former being that the Bible is public property, and the rule by which the Church itself will be judged; while that of the latter was that the Bible was the property of the priests, and to be read only with certain limitations, and that the Church is the rule by which the people are to act, and the Bible to be explained. Popery had ever maintained this principle. It had been decreed in her councils, laid down in the rescripts of her Popes, and was acted upon to the present day by bishops and priests in Ireland, and in many of our colonies. After pointing out the dangerous tendency of this principle, and showing the awful responsibility which this country incurred in the many encouragements it held out to a false system of religion, the Hon. Gentleman concluded by moving the resolution.

Sir CLAUDIUS S. HUNTER, Bart. seconded the resolution, which was then put, and carried.

The Rev. R. VOERS, in moving the next resolution, observed, that one great cause of the ignorance which prevailed amongst a large portion of the inhabitants of Newfoundland, arose from habitual intemperance. As one out of many illustrations of this which could be cited, he would mention the case of a woman who went with her child at her breast on board a vessel that just arrived, and had on board some rum. To procure rum was the object of her visit. She did obtain it, and to such a state of intoxication did she bring herself, that having laid her infant on the ground for a time, she forgot it, and returned home without it. The child was found next morning frozen to death! But this was not all; the father of the child paid a visit to the same ship next day, and procured a half-gallon of the rum for his infant's "wake," a sort of religious festival which, by permission of the priests, the poorer Roman Catholics of the island hold over their dead. These might be looked upon as some of the effects of people being wholly given up to that fatal, dark, and chilling superstition of the Church of Rome—a system to which, he regretted to say, such great encouragement was held out in this country, for which it had good reason to dread the visitation of God's wrath. In conclusion, the Rev. Gentleman observed, that the only hope of evangelizing the colony was by sending out more teachers, and also clergymen to preach the Gospel, men of piety and zeal, and nearly of the same rank as the teachers of this Society were generally taken from.

SAMUEL CODNER, Esq., seconded the resolution, which was put, and carried.

The Rev. S. ROBINS moved the next resolution.

Mr. WILLOUGHBY, the Society's agent in Newfoundland, in seconding the motion, bore testimony to the great service rendered to the Society by the Governor, the Chief Justice, and others. Through a kind letter of the Governor, highly recommending the Society, the Queen's patronage had been given to it. He alluded to the great destitution both of teachers and clergymen. After giving a brief statement of the operation of the Society, and urging upon its friends increased support, he concluded, regretting the advanced hour of the meeting; and as it had been suggested it was well not to protract the Meeting, it would not allow him to enter more fully into the Society's operations. The Resolution was put, and carried.

The Right Hon. and Very Rev. Lord EDWARD CHICHESTER, the Dean of Raphoe, moved a vote of thanks to the Noble Lord (Bexley) for his conduct in the chair, and for his general attention to the interests of the Society.

The Rev. DANIEL WILSON seconded the Motion, which having been carried,

Lord BEXLEY assured the meeting that he was deeply sensible of their kind approbation of his conduct in the chair, and also of his attention to the interests of the Society. He thanked God that for so many years he had been enabled to assist in this good work, and he hoped for the prayers of those present, that while God spared him in this world he might not be waning in any duty to which He might call him. He felt, in common with those whom he addressed, a lively interest in the colony of Newfoundland, which had been cast off, in a moral and religious sense, by the Government. There were at present only eleven Protestant clergymen in the colony, and of these the salaries allowed by the Government would die with them, while the Roman Catholics in the island had the aid of a bishop of their Church, and nineteen regular ministers. This condition of an old Protestant colony ought to stimulate its friends to renewed exertion in support of this Society. The Noble Lord concluded by again thanking the meeting for their approbation of his conduct.

The Meeting then separated.

Newfoundland has been longer in the possession of the British Crown than any other of its Colonial dependencies. Its population is about 100,000 souls, nearly all of whom are British. It takes British manufactures to the value of between two and three millions sterling annually; and for three centuries has been one of the best nurseries for skilful seamen. On these grounds alone, it will not be denied that its poor are far from wanting claims on the justice as well as the affection of this country. From various local circumstances the poor of Newfoundland are placed under peculiar disadvantages for the acquiring of moral and religious instruction. The scattered state of the small settlements which are spread over a line of coast extending more than 1400 miles, excludes them from the benefits enjoyed by larger communities, or where greater frequency of intercourse exists. In such a state of society, no means are so likely to meet the necessities of the case, as the general establishment of free daily Schools for the Poor.

For upwards of 15 years the Society has been endeavouring to impart, as far as its means would allow, the benefit of a sound scriptural education. It has, under the blessing of God, well succeeded; so much so, that the attention of the local Government has been directed to the establishment of schools, to be supported out of the resources of the colony. An Act to carry this purpose into effect has accordingly been passed. It is, however, deeply to be regretted, that this Act does not recognize the important principle that the sacred Scriptures ought to be the basis of all sound education. The consequence has been that hitherto its provisions have not been carried into effect, owing, on the one hand, to an effort to introduce the system of the Irish Board of Education; and, on the other, to the strong feeling on the part of many of the inhabitants to have no school from which the Bible shall be a prohibited book. At this important crisis, if the Society had but the means to multiply its schools, it might effectually secure to the island a scriptural education. The people earnestly call upon us to give them this boon—they are prepared to welcome it; and shall we, when but a mite is required, withhold it? The Committee have accordingly undertaken to complete the necessary repairs of some schools already erected, and to establish others; to the Christian public they look for support, nor can they believe they shall be permitted to look in vain.

The beneficial results of this system in Newfoundland have made the Committee anxious, without delay, to redeem their pledge, by including within the sphere of its operations the British provinces in North America. This tract of country reaches from the frontiers of the United States to the utmost bound northwards, including Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and their dependencies.

The multitudes inhabiting these countries may be divided into three classes, the Native Indians—British Settlers—and French Canadians. To this day the Native Indian remains in almost his primeval ignorance, while the poor among the colonists are suffering a deprivation of the means of grace and Christian instruction. The rapid increase which is taking place in the British population, (in one year the emigration having amounted to 50,000) the claims of the natives upon us, as their natural instructors, and as aggressors upon their territorial rights; the long neglect which all have experienced at our hands, and, especially, the earnestness with which they desire instruction, are pleas which, it is hoped, will not be resisted. Kindred patriotism and philanthropy call upon us to exert ourselves in behalf of the moral improvement of the colonies—for they are our countrymen and our fellow-subjects. But it is to the feelings of the public, as a Christian community, that the appeal is now made. The duty of sending the Scriptures to the Heathen is generally acknowledged. Shall then the remote regions of the globe come within the range of our benevolence; and shall those of our own empire, living under the same laws, and bound to us by such close ties, be overlooked? What shall we say to that man whom we find boundless in his charity to strangers, but neglectful of his own kindred? Certainly we would not wish him to withhold his hand from the good he was doing, but we would beg him not to disregard his own family.

The Committee once again earnestly solicit donations, but especially an increase of annual subscriptions, to enable them not only to meet the pressing claims which Newfoundland presents, but also at once, as it is their desire and intention to begin vigorously the work of Christian education in other parts of British North America. May the great Head of the Church abundantly bless this appeal to the calling forth the liberality, sympathy, and prayers of many, that may redound to the glory and praise of God!

The Committee, knowing the vast importance of the principle of accumulation by small sums, earnestly recommend to their friends to gain, as much as possible, subscribers of a penny a-week, or five shillings per annum; and aware, also, that many who wish well to the Society are deterred from subscribing in consequence of the liberal support they afford to other more important societies, would respectfully draw their attention to the Second Resolution of the Committee for Associations—viz. "That all persons subscribing the sum of five shillings or upwards per annum, or making a donation of one guinea or upwards at one time, or collecting to the amount of two pounds or upwards, shall be a Member this Association."

* Subscriptions will be thankfully received by Messrs. WHITMORE, WELLS and Co., Lombard Street; the Rev. DANIEL WILSON, Vicar of Islington; PERCIVAL WHITE, Esq., Clapham; SAMUEL CODNER, Esq., Dartmouth; and at the Office of the Society, No. 4, Exeter Hall, Strand, London. All communications are to be addressed to the Secretary, the Rev. JOSEPH HASLEGRAVE, M.A., at the Society's Office.
